Our picks for the top places in South Africa – like Blyde River Canyon – will leave you lots to look at © Gunter Nuyts / Shutterstock

Any visitor to South Africa will marvel at the country's diversity – in its geography, its culture, its wildlife and (of course) its marvelous people.

Each of South Africa's regions truly has its own distinct personality, offering a captivating blend of cosmopolitan cities, enthralling animals, rich history and remote wilderness. From the bustling streets of Cape Town and the wild-game viewing in Kruger National Park to the charming valleys of the Winelands, every place here enchants.

So though it was hard, we've selected a few of the absolute best places to visit in South Africa.

1. Johannesburg

Best city for history and street art

South Africa's largest city is admittedly not one of its prettiest. Johannesburg was an old mining town that has become a sprawling conurbation, with poorer neighborhoods sprinkled among wealthy suburbs. It seems a world away from Cape Town's coastal beauty – yet spending some time in Johannesburg gives visitors valuable insight into the country's complicated past and lively present.

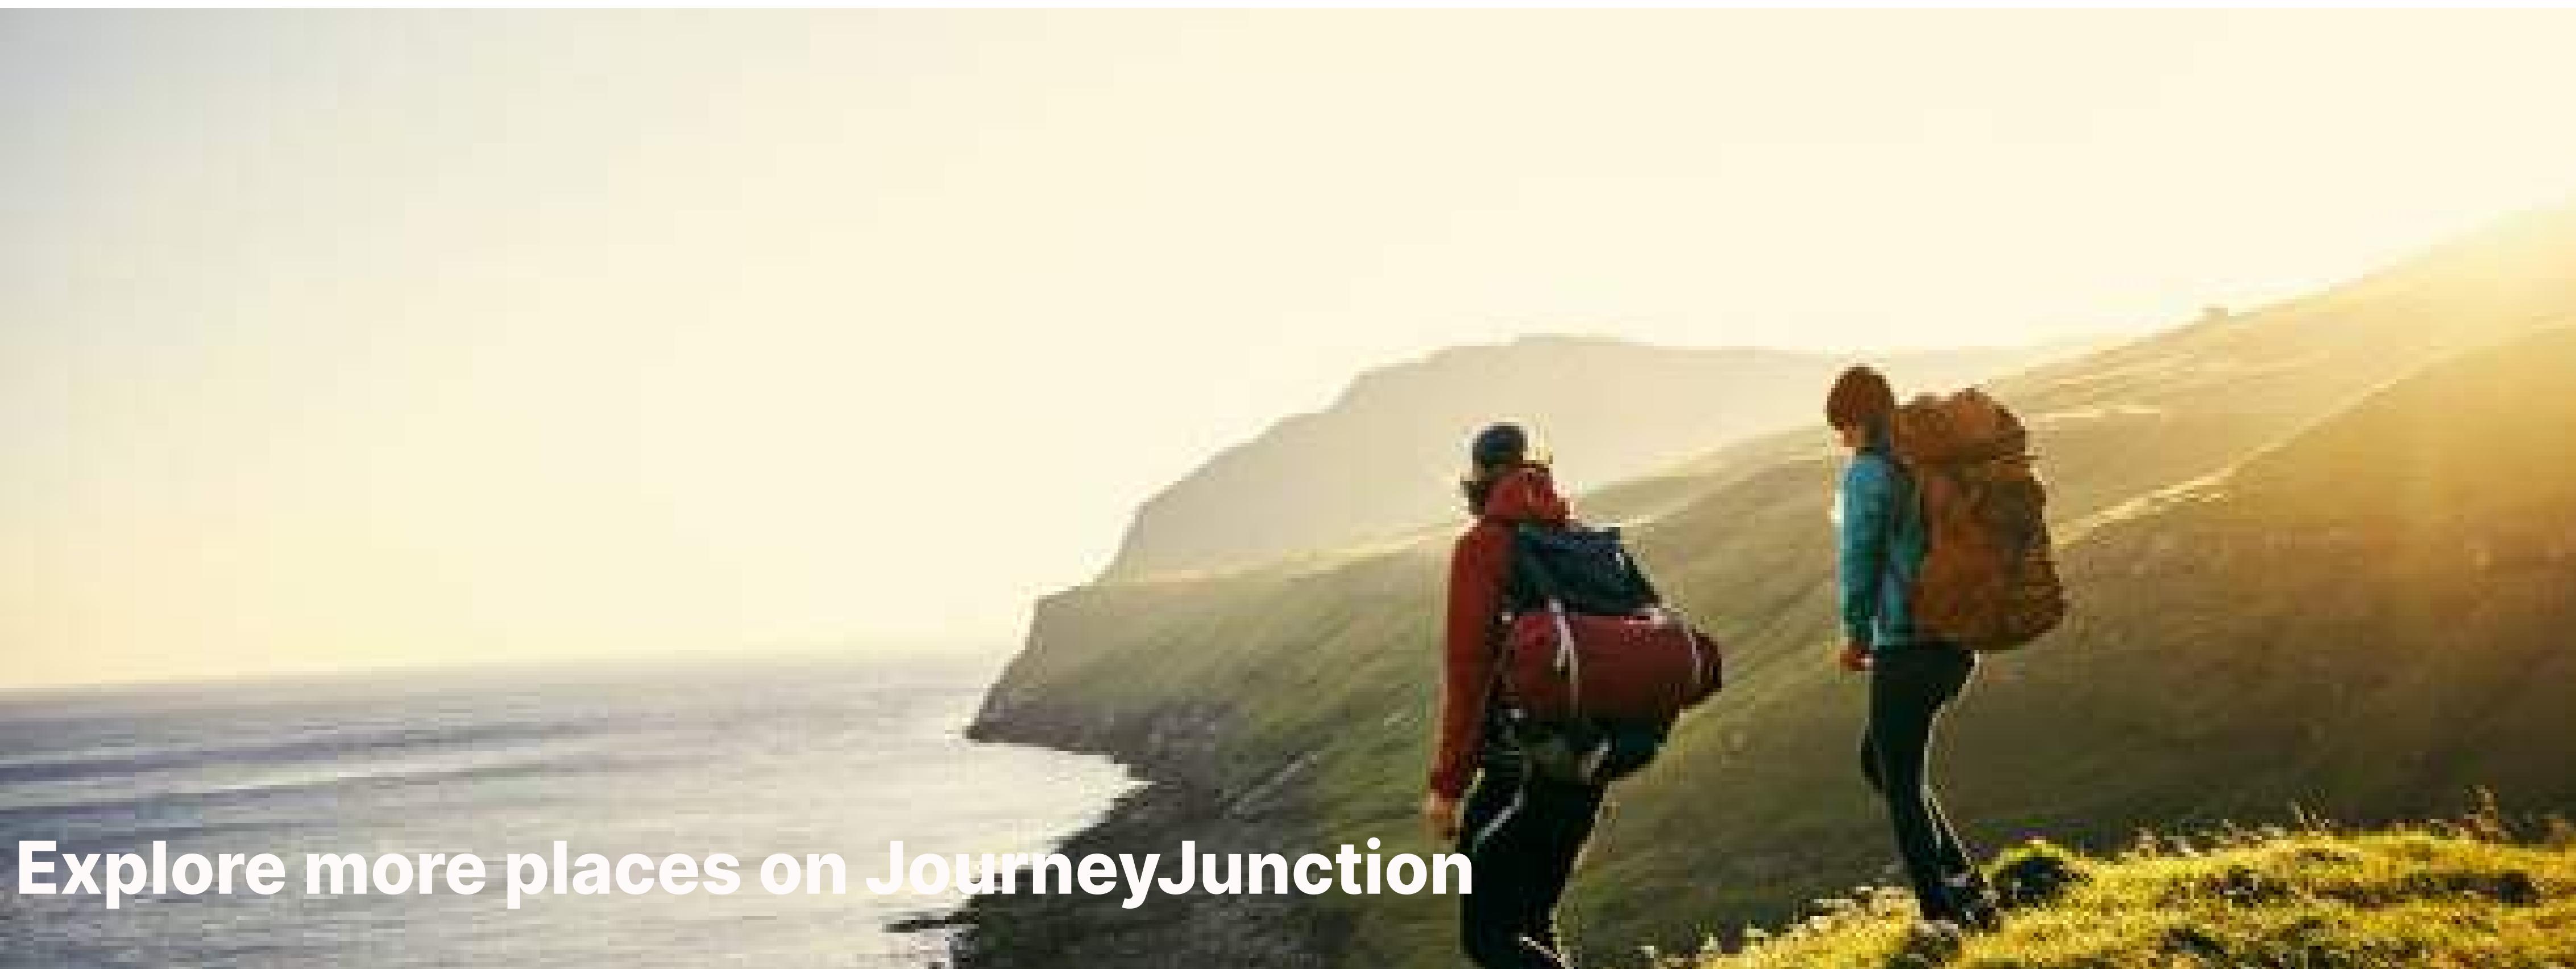

Start by visiting the Apartheid Museum, see the street art in Maboneng Precinct and take a historical tour of Soweto to get a feel for Johannesburg's heritage. Read more.

Roxanne de Bruyn

Auckland, New Zealand

About Roxanne

Originally from South Africa, I've lived in New Zealand for over 20 years. I've travelled extensively through Europe, the Middle East and the South Pacific, with shorter trips in other regions. As I'm based in a relatively remote country, I tend to travel for longer periods of time and I enjoy travelling slowly whenever possible. Sampling the local food and wine is also a priority for any trip!

I've studied ancient history and international development, and I love learning about the myths, legends and folklore of the places I visit. I'm particularly interested in cultural tourism and sustainable travel.
